THE lateſt Dictionaries of any language are generally the beſt; as the laſt editor muſt be very injudicious, ſhould he not retain whatever appears to be valuable in former works of the like nature. If he be diligent and ſkilful, he cannot fail to inſert what has been omitted by preceding lexicographers; and to correct miſtakes of the preſs, or in the orthography and accents. A moderate degree of judgment will enable him to reject what is foreign to the ſubject; and to be careful in expunging what is only proper for a treatiſe of geography, or a dictionary of arts and ſciences.

Several Dictionaries, in Engliſh and Spaniſh, have appeared in this country. The firſt was compiled by Capt. Stevens, who, having reſided ſome years in Spain, undertook to publiſh an Engliſh and Spaniſh Dictionary, as we then had nothing of this kind worth attention. His compilation is far from being contemptible; and he availed himſelf with much induſtry of the Dictionaries of Nebrixa and Aldrete, that were then the beſt which had been publiſhed in Spain. His work was printed ſeveral times in the courſe of the laſt century.

After Captain Stevens, Pineda pretended to make, as the phraſe is, a perfect Spaniſh and Engliſh Dictionary; but the perfection of his work conſiſted in nothing more than in mutilating the Dictionary of Stevens in many places, and making a very few additions; though, in the preface to his book, Pineda took great liberties with the Spaniſh Academicians, who had compiled, in ſix large folio volumes, a Dictionary of their language, under the auſpices, and at the expence, of their king Philip the Fifth; and was hardy enough, in that preface, to diſpute with thoſe Academicians upon the ſubject of their orthography, which they had regulated in a proper manner.

To Pineda ſucceeded Delpino, who likewiſe undertook to compile a better Spaniſh and Engliſh Dictionary than had hitherto appeared. It muſt be confeſſed, that, with all his faults, he took the trouble of adjuſting the orthography of the Spaniſh part, after the manner of the Spaniſh Academicians; and, in his preface, he juſtly blamed Pineda for not conforming to their orthography.

Delpino's edition being ſold, and a new one wanted, the preſent compiler has corrected and enlarged it. This he has performed chiefly by the help of Johnſon's Dictionary with regard to the Engliſh part, and of the Spaniſh Academicians with regard to the Spaniſh. He can with truth declare, that he has added little leſs than ten thouſand words, and made many neceſſary eraſures. As to the orthography, he has adhered to Johnſon and the Academicians, without the leaſt deviation. He does not pretend, that this work is a perfect one of the kind; on the contrary, he candidly owns, that it is ſtill far from perfection. Mean while, the Engliſhman who intends to learn Spaniſh, and the Spaniard who ſtudies Engliſh, will not often find themſelves at a loſs for the meaning of a word.

To conclude in Johnſon's words, "Of ſuch a work as this, it is not neceſſary "to ſay more; and it is preſumed, it will not be found that truth required the "editor to ſay leſs."

A NEW

A NEW

SPANISH and ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

PART THE FIRST,

CONTAINING

The SPANISH before the ENGLISH.

A, The firſt letter of the Spaniſh alphabet, and almoſt all known languages, and the firſt of the five vowels.

A is a prepoſition which marks the dative and accuſative caſes either ſingular or plural; ex. à Pedro, to Peter; à los hombres, to the men.

A marks alſo the accuſative caſe; ex. amo a Pedro, I love Peter.

A, in Spaniſh, ſounds always like a in theſe Engliſh words, tall, war, call; ex. cadaver, a corpſe; abanico, a fan.

A is uſed likewiſe before the articles el, la, and los; ex. à el hombre, to the man; à los Ingleſes, to the Engliſhmen.

A is a prepoſition, which they take from the Latin ad; when it is joined with a proper name in the maſculine gender, they uſe it ſimply; as á Fernado, á Carlos; to Ferdinand, to Charles: but when it is joined to a noun appellative in the maſculine gender, it agrees with the article el, which precedes the noun; and to avoid the meeting of the two vowels, the e is ſuppreſſed; and ſo it is ſaid, al Rey, to the King; al Papa, to the Pope; and yet the a continues a prepoſition, as if it was ſeparated.

A ſerves alſo to explain the action of the verb, either when it precedes the proper names of things, as jugar á las cartas, to play at cards; or when it is placed before an infinitive governed by another verb, as vamos á paſear, let us go to walk; ir á comer, to go to dinner; matarſe á eſtudiar, to kill one's ſelf with ſtudy.

A ſignifies the place where any thing had happened; ex. á la puerta de ſu caſa, at the door of his houſe.

A ſhews alſo the nearneſs of any thing or place; ex. eſtar ſentado á la meſa, to ſit down at table; á la puerta, at the door.

A explains the diſtance from one place to another, and from one point of time to another, as de Madrid á Cadiz hay cien leguas, there is a hundred leagues from Madrid to Cadiz; de aqui á ſeis meſes, hence ſix months.

A ſignifies the time in which an action is done, as á deſhora, out of ſeaſon; á las cinco, at five o'clock.

A ſignifies alſo the manner of the action; ex. á pie, on foot; á caballo, on horſeback; paſo á paſo, one ſtep after another.

A ſignifies conformity or good order in any thing, as á ley de Caſtilla, according to the law of Caſtille; á fuere de Aragon, after the cuſtom of Aragon.

A ſerves alſo to explain quantity or number, as el gaſto ſube á cien peſos, the expence amounts to a hundred dollars; vale de veinte, á veinte y cinco doblones, it is worth from twenty to twenty-five doublons; murieron en la batalla de quatro á cinco mil hombres, there were killed in the battle from four to five thouſand men.

A ſerves to expreſs the price of any thing, as á veinte reales vale la fanega de trigo, a buſhel of corn is worth twenty reals.

A, after the verbs of motion, ſometimes points out the place where one goes, as ir á Madrid, to go to Madrid; ir al campo, to go into the country; marchar á Roma, to go to Rome; llevar á Cadiz, to carry any thing to Cadiz; and ſometimes is made uſe of for the prepoſition hazia, towards, or contra, againſt; as como ſe fue hazia, or contra, ellos vol-vio la cara á tal parte, as he went towards them, he turned his face to ſuch a ſide.

A is a prepoſition which ſignifies alſo on, into, at; as á las tres, at three o'clock; á veinte leguas de aqui, twenty leagues off; á dos pulgadas de tierra, within two inches of the ground; á razon de ſeis por ciento, at the rate of ſix per cent.; á la drecha, on the right hand.

A points out the diſtribution or equal partition of any thing; as á tres por ciento, at three per cent.; á perdiz por barba, a partridge each; dos á dos, two by two.

A is alſo a particle which has ſeveral ſignifications; ſometimes it ſignifies the faſhion: ex. veſtida a la Franceſa, dreſſed after the French faſhion.

Sometimes the quality; ex. a prueba de bombas, bomb-proof.

Sometimes it is put for the adverb about; de nueve á diéz mil hombres, about nine or ten thouſand men.

A precedes many adverbs; ex. poco á poco, ſoftly; á trueco, by changing; á brazo partido, by ſtrength of arms; á viſta de ojos, evidently; á pecho deſcubierto, ſincerely.

It is alſo a particle of compoſition in many verbs, as from deuda, lanza, palo, are formed adeudar, alanzár, apaleár, &c.

A ſignifies alſo the motive or end of the action, as á inſtancia del Rey, vino el Papa en ello, at the King's requeſt, the Pope agreed to it; á beneficio del publico, for the public good; á que propoſito, to what purpoſe.

A ſignifies the inſtrument with which any thing is done, as quien á hierro mata, á hierro muere, he who kills with a knife, dies by it.

Theſe are the principal ſenſes wherein this letter is uſed; but there are ſome others beſides, which can hardly be brought under the foregoing ſignifications, or indeed under any particular rules; yet you will find them all in the ſeries of this dictionary.
